Jobs and Internships Overview | Class of 2016

Master of International Development Policy

Duke Center for International Development (DCID)
Sanford School of Public Policy
Duke University
The Master of International Development Policy (MIDP) program, administered by the Duke Center for International Development at Duke University’s Sanford School of Public Policy, is a flexible, self-designed program for mid-career professionals who dedicate their careers to policymaking and public service for developing, post-conflict and transition countries.

The program provides both theoretical and practical knowledge and skills that strengthen the capacity of government officials, NGO leaders, social innovators and peace builders to serve the public good around the world. Below are just a few of the positions our graduates currently hold worldwide:

- Chair of Parliament, Republic of Georgia
- Special Assistant to the President, Republic of Kazakhstan
- Deputy Director, USAID Mission in Tanzania
- Resident Representative, United Nations Development Program
- Senior Gender Specialist - Africa, International Labour Organization

Class Highlights

- Fellows found Sanford’s Latin America and Caribbean (LAC) organization
- Fellow reaches regional finals for Hult Prize
- 75% of graduates return to previous employer or home country
- Fellow founds social enterprise with assistance from the Duke Start-Up Challenge
- Six graduates are the first hired by their organization from the MIDP program
- 70% of fellows receive government scholarships

The MIDP program prepares established professionals to take the next step in their careers, usually in the public or nonprofit sectors. Approximately 75 percent of graduates return to their home countries or previous employers to take leadership positions in government agencies or nonprofit organizations.

Our 2016 graduates are currently employed with agencies and organizations such as Deloitte, the United Nations Development Programme, UN Women, and the Governments of Liberia, South Korea and India.
Summer Experience by Sector (2016)

MIDP fellows are required to complete an internship, consultancy or research project in the summer between their first and second years. This summer experience allows them to put the knowledge they have gained in the classroom into practice at various international financial institutions, NGOs, government agencies and private firms, or conduct in-depth research that they can later apply in their development careers.

In 2016, fellows completed internships or consultancies at the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, Plan International, the U.S. Congress, Voice of America and the Eurasia Foundation.
